

Draw out what's Best in Your Daughter/Son

Back to Meeting Planner's

There are proven principles of communication, subtle shifts in the way you talk and listen that when consistently applied produce better understanding, more cooperation and compassion, and relationships based on a greater level of trust and respect.

Marilyn Suttle sheds light on these basic principles and helps you update your skills to experience a happier family life. The skills are simple but they aren't always easy to apply. It takes courage to step out of your automatic way of responding to your daughter's/son's more challenging behaviors, especially during the transitions from child to preteen to teen. It takes energy to notice where you might be "stuck" and sharpen your skills to talk so s/he will respond in positive ways. It takes an open mind to self evaluate your current style of parenting to see if it is helping or hurting your relationship.

If you want to grow into the best version of yourself while giving your child access to the best version of his or herself, then this method is for you. As you practice your skills, you will feel a greater sense of peace. In this session, you will walk away with a variety of tools to help you deal with your child's challenging moods and behaviors. This is not a method to manipulate. It is a humane approach for reaching into the hearts and minds of the child you love to create a happier respect-based relationship that lasts.
